However, our work was far from over.
There was so much to do.
Though it had long been abandoned,
and only partially completed,
we determined that
The 800 of us
left behind...
We devised
a meticulous plan
finishing the orbital elevator was the most reliable,
and most realistic option.
We worked tirelessly
It was imperative that everything be done perfectly
if there was to be
any chance
of success
Through sheer luck,
the vast majority of the construction had become fully automated to find some way that would save everyone

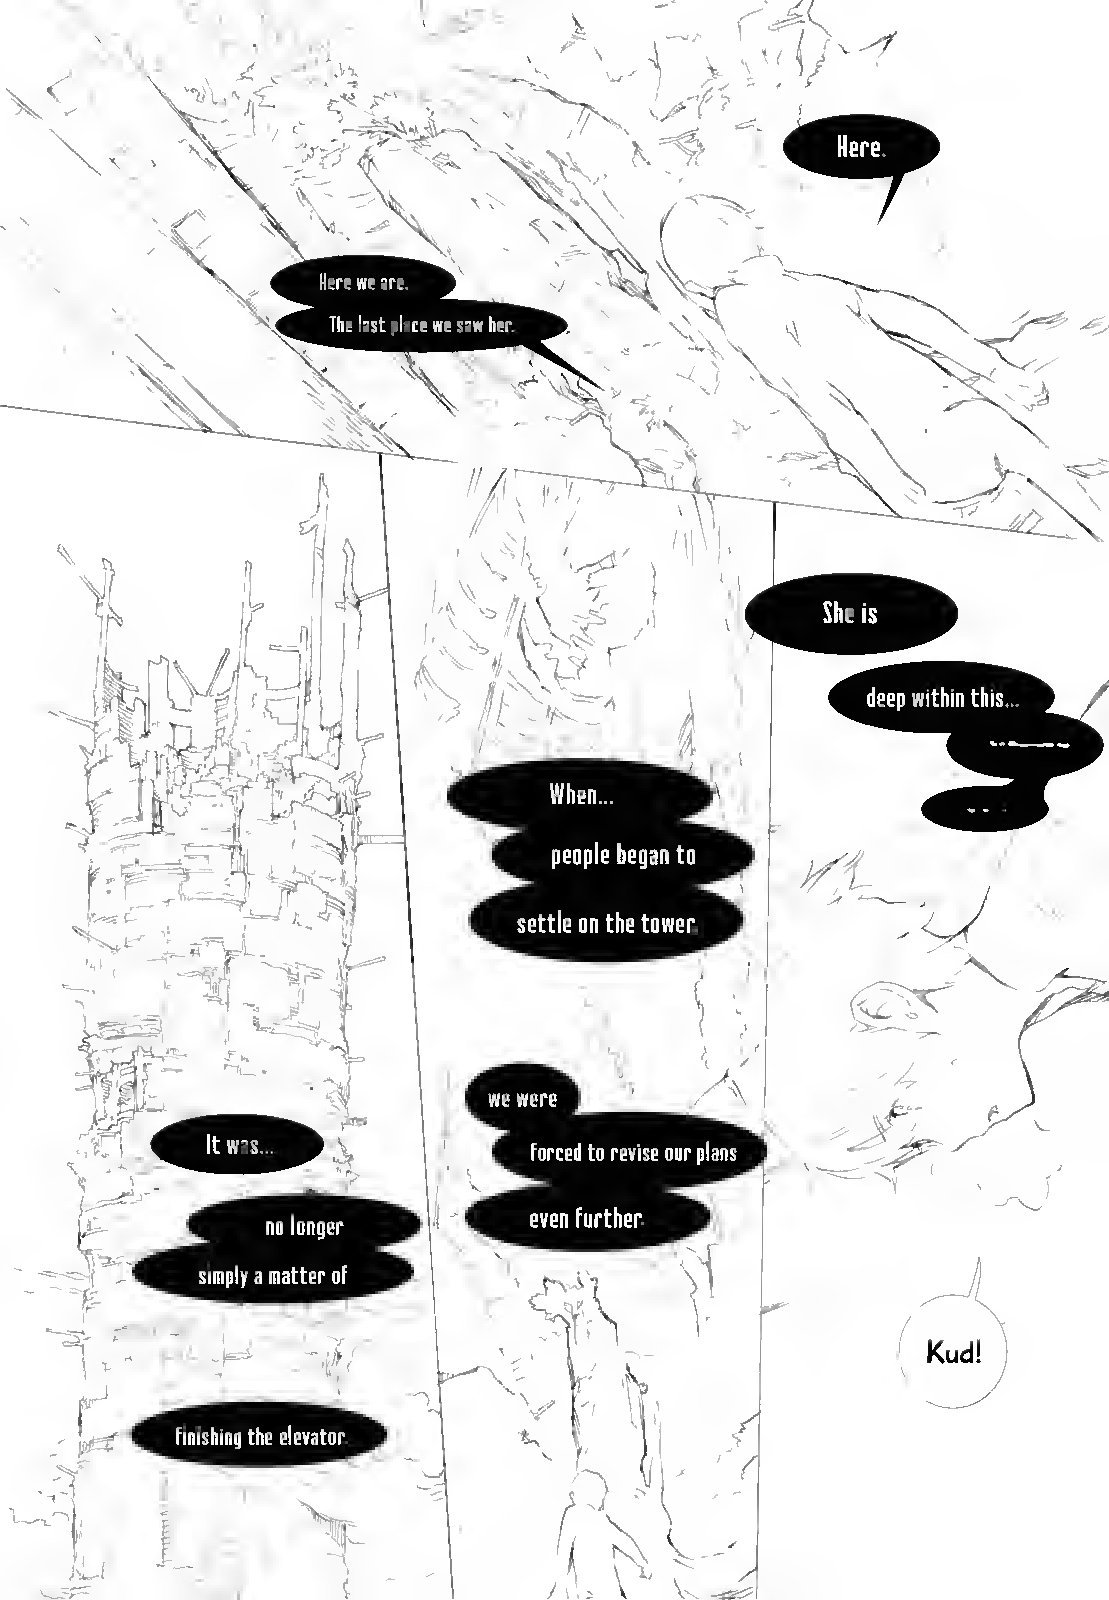
When
her brother was born,
we were overjoyed.
But we hadn't thought
of the heavy burden...
we would be placing on them...
Food
and resources
were limited.
Small problems
kept piling up, one after the other.
We realized
just how flawed our plan really was.
Eventually,
even having children
was forbidden...



Here.
Here we are.
The last place we saw her.
She is
deep within this...
When...
people began to
settle on the tower.
we were
forced to revise our plans
even further.
It was...
no longer
simply a matter of
finishing the elevator.
Kud!

But something went wrong.
We put
our son and daughter
on the last
working pod.
The population on the station
had been growing steadily.
Many times, we had people
take evacuation pods back to the surface.
But soon,
there were
few pods left
that could fly properly.
We were so sure...
And somehow we managed to fix another.
We planned on
following after them
as soon as possible.
they had died...

We just wanted to get back to Earth so badly...
Forgive us...
Sorry, my love
